Vom Couchtisch zum Brettspiel

Instructions No. 394

"Lucky Boy" is the name of the funny board game painted on the little table. The discarded coffee table is thus brought back to life and at the same time finds its new place in the children's room as a cheerful, colourful table.

So your discarded coffee table becomes a gaming table:

For this idea we used a table with a top in the size of 67 x 67 cm.

Prepare the table by sanding it and then remove the sanding dust with a damp cloth from The table top is now primed white and painted may green when dry. This is particularly easy to do on large surfaces and is done evenly with a foam roller or a surface brush.

Tip: As an alternative to an old table, you can also use a square plywood board or a Stretched Canvas .

Paint the outer edges of the table, the table legs and an approx. 1.5 cm wide edge around the table green and allow to dry thoroughly

The playing field is divided with a pencil and a long ruler into 8 x 8 squares, the corner squares are each painted in a different color, they are the starting fields in the game. The borders of the squares are then painted with a 1 mm wide permanent paint Marker follow up.

Cut out napkin motifs and remove the two unprinted layers of paper. Spray the motif layer from behind with masking glue and let it flash off briefly. Then glue it on the board. Then seal the complete game board with Napkin varnish .

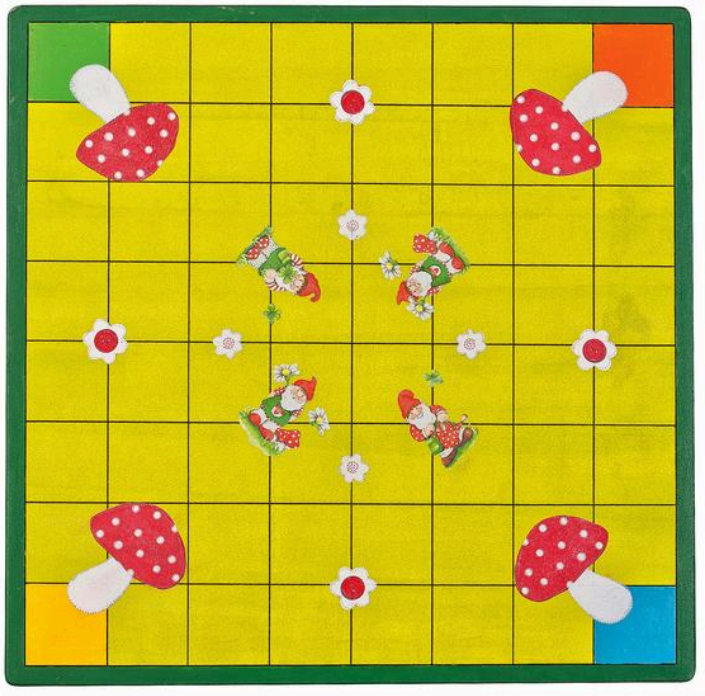

Game pieces

Prime the figure cones and wooden boards white. After drying, glue the wooden boards to the bevel of the figure cones. Paint the curvature of the boards with red Handicraft paint and apply white dots after drying

Border the glued area with the 1 mm wide liner and paint the faces on. Trace the contours of the dots and draw in the mushroom lamellae. Finally, paint an approx. 2 cm wide foot in the colours of the starting fields and border it with the Fineliners .

And this is how it is played

At the beginning, each player places his or her piece on the starting field. The Embellishment are distributed on the remaining fields.

Now the dice are rolled clockwise. The player who rolls the highest number may start

The players draw with their Game pieces according to the number rolled and collect the small toadstools on the target fields. If there is no more mushroom there, the move is unfortunately unsuccessful. You may move in all directions, even diagonally.

The game ends when the last mushroom has been collected. Whoever then has the most mushrooms is the "lucky mushroom" and has won.

This idea is timelessly beautiful!
